Quick ... Sex hormones, especially estrogen have potent antioxidant properties. They play a crucial role in maintaining non-reproductive and reproductive functions. The effect of estrogen on the brain is a complex subject. Extensive research on menopausal women has linked low estrogen levels with memory decline. Estrogen stimulates the growth of nerve cells in the hippocampus thus strengthening connections between the nerve cells, also improving memory. In the absence of estrogen, the nerve connections might not as efficiently store and retrieve certain information. With menopause estrogen levels gradually reduce, therefore the risk of memory loss is increased. In such cases hormone therapy for memory is known to help restore the declining sex hormones.
