Turinabol is a derivative of dianabol that has undergone certain modifications in its chemical structure. The major difference between the two steroids is the presence of 4-chloro alteration in turinabol, which gives it properties unseen with dianabol. In fact, this alteration can also be observed with Clostebol.

@learningloveinstitute The idea of combining the structures of 4-chlorotestosterone (clostebol) and metandienone originated from the chemist Albert Stachowiak. [citation needed] At the time this represented a unique dissociation of anabolic and androgenic effects after oral administration. [1]
