THE EFFECTS OF HORMONE REPLACEMENT THERAPY ON THE BODY

Hormone replacement therapy (HRT) can help to ease symptoms of menopause. As a woman approaches her mid-40s to early 50s, levels of the female hormones estrogen and progesterone start to decline. The menstrual cycle becomes irregular. Menopause is the point when a woman has not had a period for a year. Common symptoms of menopause include hot flashes, sleep disturbances, and vaginal discomfort. For most women, symptoms of menopause are mild and no treatment is necessary.

When symptoms do become troublesome, HRT may help. Another reason to take HRT is early menopause due to primary ovarian insufficiency (POI) or other diseases. Cancer treatment, including surgery, radiation, and chemotherapy may trigger early menopause. You will go through menopause if you have your uterus removed but keep your ovaries. Removal of the ovaries (hysterectomy) causes immediate menopause.

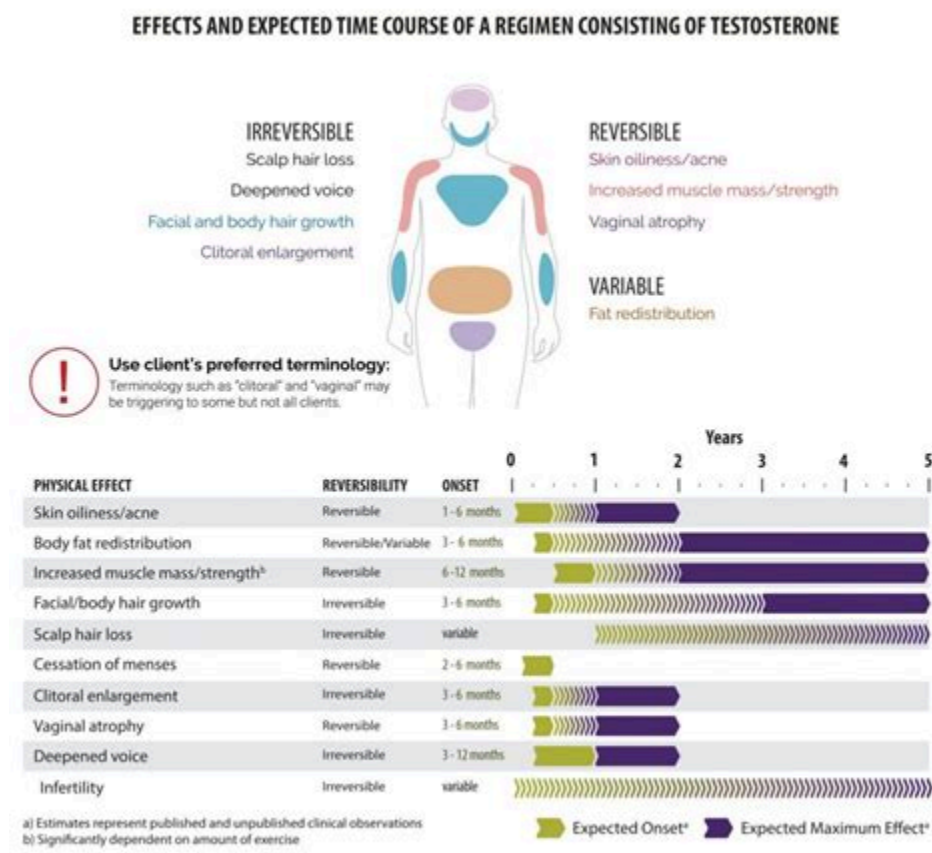

Estrogen therapy (ET) and estrogen-progestin therapy (EPT) come in the form of pills, injections, and skin patches. It can also be dispensed in easy-to-use vaginal creams, suppositories, or a vaginal ring.

While HRT can ease symptoms of menopause, there are also some health risks to consider. In order to minimize risk, your doctor may start with a very low dose to see if your symptoms improve. Side effects vary from woman to woman and depend on the dosage and combination of hormones.
