Testosterone injections are typically intramuscular - that is, given directly into a muscle. Two relatively easy and accessible sites for intramuscular injection are the vastus lateralis (top outside region of the thigh) or the glut (upper back portion of the thigh, ie, the butt cheek). For many people, the preferred site for testosterone injections is the gluteus medius muscle (glute). This area is the upper outer quadrant of the buttock, closer to the hip than the thigh and toward the outside. A commonly used reference point for this quadrant is the iliac crest, which is located at the top of the pelvic girdle on the back side.

The larger needle is required due to the thickness of the testosterone medication. The proper injection site is chosen by dividing the thigh horizontally into 3 parts. The injectable testosterone dosage will then be administered into the outer, middle third area of the upper thigh.

Testosterone is injected into a muscle. The injection is usually given every 2 to 4 weeks. Testosterone injections should be given only by a healthcare professional. Misuse can lead to serious side effects or death.

Testosterone injections should be given deeply into vascular muscle tissue. The deltoids, the vastus lateralis, and gluteal muscles are the most common intramuscular (IM) injection sites. Those are your arm, thigh, and buttocks respectively. Some of these sites, are more prone to pain than others. Are you having a problem getting your next meal in? Well here is Your insurance policy.
