It can feel hard to stay positive, during these times especially, but with anything and everything, every day, I just tell myself that 'it could be so much worse' and it definitely could. I've had an experience in my life that has been so humbling and allows me to have perspective on everything. To the point that I appreciate something as little as going for a walk outside, because I'm constantly reminded of all the things my Dad was unable to do because he was so unwell. It's made me grateful. It's made me present. It's made me see the good in things rather than the negative. So when something is really getting to you, ruining your day, your mood and how you feel, try and sit back and decide whether you want to let this affect you and / or what you can do to change it.
