Cardarine isn't known to cause suppression at all. To be on the safe side, you could take an over the counter PCT like Arimistane and likely be fine. I've even heard that many people get away without doing a PCT at all for Osta. But again, the only way to know 100% is to get the tests done.

Do I need to do a pct after a full cycle of Cardarine? : r . - Reddit

Do you need a PCT with Cardarine? No, Cardarine does not suppress testosterone or have any effects on hormones at all. So you don't need to do post cycle therapy when using Cardarine on its own in a cycle. If you stack Cardarine with any suppressive compounds, PCT will be required.

Full Cardarine Guide : r/CardarineQuestions - Reddit

The idea behind a post cycle therapy, or PCT for short, is that it "jump starts" the process of getting your natural testosterone levels back up to normal, after your body has lowered production for 8-12 weeks on SARMs. A good PCT is definitely required after a steroid cycle, but do SARMs require a PCT? If so, how should you do one properly?

Official SARMs PCT Guide: Important Information Inside - Nectac

You should only take PCT when it is absolutely necessary, otherwise, you're subjecting your body to unnecessary torture. In the case of Ostarine, if your source is legit and if you stick to recommended dosages and cycle lengths, it is highly unlikely that you'll need PCT for it.
