CASE REPORT

Colistin, meropenem and rifampin in a combination therapy for multi-drug-resistant Acinetobacter baumannii multifocal infection

ABSTRACT

A 16 year-old girl underwent a multifocal (lungs, skin, soft tissues) infection due to multiresistant Acinetobacter baumannii after a car crash. To treat such a severe disease we used a combination therapy of colistin (2 millions Units twice/day), rifampicin (600 mg/day), meropenem (1 g 3 times a day) after a synergistic activity test was performed (checkerboard method on Mueller-Hinton broth and  $5 \times 10^6$  cfu/mL inoculum). After 24 days, when a significant clinical improvement was gained, the 3-drug combination therapy was replaced with i.v. levofloxacin 500 mg twice/day but, after 10 days of quinolones therapy, fever started again and the same multidrug resistant (MDR) A. baumannii was isolated from the skin grafts, central venous catheter tip and bronchial alveolar lavage. A combination therapy with colistin and meropenem was then restarted and definitive defervescence was obtained after 10 days. This therapy was continued for 70 days even if the patient was afebrile because A. baumannii was still present in the skin secretions. After 109 days of hospitalization in our intensive care unit, the patient was transferred to a rehabilitative unit. This case shows how useful is, in selected cases, rediscovering old antibiotic drugs, specially when they are adopted as a combination therapy, and highlights the importance of the clinical microbiological laboratory as it may help clinicians in choosing the best drug combination.

Key words: Colistin - Rifampin - Meropenem - Acinetobacter baumannii - Drug synergism.

Colistin is a polypeptide antibiotic of the polymyxin family (polymyxin E) discovered in 1949 which is active against most gram-negative aerobic bacteria. Its use was restricted to topical formulations due to the high incidence of nephrotoxicity when given intravenously.<sup>1, 2</sup> However, the emergence of non-fermentative gram-negative rods (NFGNR) resistant to most classes of commercially available antibiotics and the shortage of new antimicrobial agents against gram-negative bacteria have led to reconsideration of colistin<sup>3-4</sup> and other "old" antibiotic compounds like rifampin.<sup>5-6</sup> Among non-fermentative bacteria, A. baumannii represents a particular threat in Intensive Care Units due to both its production of beta-lactamase compounds making it multiresistant<sup>7-9</sup> and its poor metabolic demands making it capable of surviving, even in unfriendly environments and on furnishing, with significant danger for epidemic outbreaks.<sup>10-12</sup> In
