Take deep breaths: Breathing happens so unconsciously that we rarely think about it. But under stress, our breathing rates tend to increase, which decreases oxygen to our brain. This is the 'fight or flight' part of our stress response systems trying to protect us from what it perceives as danger, but this heightened state also makes it difficult for our brain to focus. By taking deep, slow breaths (in and out!) you trick your stress response system into relaxing. Lots of people use tools to do this, but I like to just put a hand on my belly to make sure I'm breathing deeply and then count in for four, hold for four, and then out for four.
