Contrary to fitness culture's belief, physical activity is only a small portion (~20%) of your daily burn. However, this is the parameter we can most readily influence to the largest extent. The largest contributor to your daily caloric expenditure is resting metabolic rate (~70%). This is what your body burns at rest and is highly subject to individuality and self restricted food intake. When we drastically diet too long this can downregulate our RMR, ultimately leading us to expend less energy and impede weight loss. This also makes it difficult to build new muscle tissue. Adaptations in energy expenditure caused by calorie restriction and weight loss serve to prevent further weight loss and conserve energy. See how this can eventually cause you to plateau? .
