Anyone else had an existential crisis this week? In light of everything that's going on I had a "bigger picture moment" of pure mindfulness when you can just see everything for what it is. And holy crap I kind of went insane for 10 minutes. SO much has changed in the world and in my life over the last year, it's pretty incredible but scares me. How much will I have changed by this time next year? And then the year after that? Going on hormones was something I've waited years for, now I'm on them and it's the best feeling - I'm finally starting to connect with my body and my face, the reflection that looks back at me is starting to look more like who I really am. But any kind of change is scary, and the physical changes put into perspective just how crazy the emotional changes are. The choices I was making 365 days ago were choices I currently would never make. But people grow up, and they grow up fast. I keep looking around me and I'm a totally different person surrounded by totally different people. It's mad. Oof that's really ramble-y but meh, wanted to vent a little. (Hope everyone is staying safe and happy, keep protesting, keep sharing black voices, keep donating and signing petitions, silence is complacency and complacency is White privilege.) 1350

□ Winstrol is a 17C-AA anabolic steroid, which means that it is a methylated oral steroid that needs to bypass the liver to be available for absorption. This makes it liver toxic. That's irrespective of whether you use the oral or the injectable. Both are 17C-AA and both are liver toxic.
