It's been a while since I've posted. I've recently been diagnosed with type two diabetes. I thought I'd break a misconception that I once believed myself. Sugar in its own right doesn't cause diabetes. For my case, I do believe genetics played a great role for the fact that I'm only 22.9% body fat. Though this is still a significant amount of body fat. However there are many ppl who have a higher body fat percentage than me that are not diabetic. This is where genes come in. My father and grandmother are diabetic. My sister was a gestational diabetic however, she is no longer diabetic after giving birth. discover more

I often get a lot of comments such as "I'm not flexible" or "i am not sure I can do the poses" everytime a friend practices yoga with me for the first time, as if not being flexible already disqualifies them from being a yogi. I hope I was successful in assuring them (as I am trying to assure whoever might be reading this post) that yoga isn't meant to do anything more than to serve you-and that anyone can do yoga. Whether or not you can excute the perfect alignment of a pose is inconsequential given that our bodies and minds are all different. Yoga teachers are just there to guide you through a sequence, but what you do is ultimately up to how your body, mind, and breath are feeling. What I have learned most in my yoga class are: 1) I have no other purpose in this class but to heal from any form of physical, mental, or emotional suffering, and 2) humility-that though I strive to be better in my practice, we all move at different paces and I would much rather focus on what my body, mind, and breath are telling me than to hurt myself by forcing a pose when I am not ready.
