As hair is being formed, before it protrudes through the scalp, it is exposed to blood, lymph and intracellular fluids. During this time, it accumulates constituents present in that environment, particularly the minerals, but also toxins. As the cortex of the hair shaft hardens, these constituents are encased within, and can then be tested to see the internal metabolic environment and used to determine mineral status within the body. It can give us a ❖snap shot❖ of energy and stress patterns within the body over the last 2-3 months. It cannot be used to ❖diagnose❖ a specific condition, but it can show potential pathways towards a disease state, help you to understand your symptoms, and ultimately give you a holistic approach to remedy deficiencies and/or toxicities.
