Concentration-dependent antibiotics achieve increasing bacterial kill with increasing levels of drug. In addition, these agents have an associated concentration-dependent PAE in which bactericidal action continues for a period of time after the antibiotic level falls below the MIC. The peak concentration and area under the concentration curve (AUC) determine efficacy of these antibiotics. For this group of drugs, concentrations of at least 10 times the MIC are needed for optimal bactericidal effect. High doses as shorter infusions or lesser frequency are better. But at some point my desire to get back in shape became a necessity. After working in the medical field and EMS for nearly 20 years, my body began to push back. If you spend enough time in a state of "fight or flight", your system will begin to fight things that aren't there. I began to develop hypertension, heart palpitations, and just felt weak overall with absolutely no energy. I decided enough was enough. I began acquiring a decent amount of equipment over the course of a year or so through Craigslist and fb marketplace, and was able to put together a pretty nice home gym this past year. You can do allot with a home gym, and still have plenty of time left over for all the adulting things. Feeling much better, but there's still allot of work to do.
